	WWF–India. • To promote environmental awareness and biodiversity conservation among students. • To encourage active student participation in citizen science and conservation-related activities. • To build field skills in species observation, identification, and ecological documentation. • To foster environmental responsibility and motivate students To contribute to real - time conservation efforts.
11. Description of the Program/activity/ event	An orientation session was conducted under the Campus Engagement Programme initiated by the Nature Club, Department of Zoology, with support from WWF-India. The session was delivered by Ms. Lisha Da Costa, a representative of WWF-India, who introduced students to the structure, activities, and opportunities available through the programme. She informed the students about the big butterfly month activity, which was a survey of butterfly species across the University campus. She also introduced the basics Lepidopterans morphology, defence mechanisms, habitat, habit, adaptations, migrations, et cetera. The programme operates within WWF–India’s Nature Conservation framework and promotes student involvement in conservation through citizen science and field-based initiatives. Students were informed about various volunteer opportunities such as Moth Week, Butterfly Count, Dragonfly Count, Tree Count, Bird Counts (local and campus-based), and the City Nature Challenge. These activities focus on systematic conservation, identification, and documentation of species while contributing to ecological databases.

12. Benefit/Key outcomes of the Program/ activity/event	The resource person oriented the audience about the key benefits of the conservation of butterflies on the campus. Participation in the Campus Engagement Program offers multiple benefits to students: Development of field identification and data collection skills. Practical exposure to biodiversity and monitoring the data of particular or group of species. Enhanced awareness of local flora and fauna. Opportunities for Networking with conservationists and like-minded peers. Contribution to national and global biodiversity databases. Strengthening of academic and professional
